Q: ASP.NET MVC 3 - Dynamically adding fields to form I've got a form with the following field, @Html.LabelFor(model => model.Question) @Html.EditorFor(model => model.Question) The editor looks something like this I have a situation where the user of the website will be able to add more questions to the form as they progress. But I don't want to add the field to the view. Is there a way I could maybe add it to the viewModel and then pass it to the form, so it's like they have added 10 questions to it? A: I believe you can use ViewModels, where you will have public class FormViewModel { public IEnumerable Questions { get; set; } } public class QuestionViewModel { public string FieldName { get; set; } public string Value { get; set; } } in your controller you will add public ActionResult AddQuestion() { FormViewModel model = new FormViewModel(); model.Questions = new List(); return View(model); } and finally in your view you will declare a loop to add your form: @model FormViewModel @using (Html.BeginForm("AddQuestion", "Controller", FormMethod.Post, new { id = "myForm" }))) { @for (int i = 0; i m.Questions[i].FieldName) @Html.TextBoxFor(m => m.Questions[i].Value, new { @class = "text-box single-line" }) @Html.ValidationMessageFor(m => m 0cc13bf012
