Lasers, super-powered shrunken villains, and skill? You want some of that? You don't have a problem, friend. In The Spy Who Shrank Me, a group of villains has stolen a map that allows them to return to the world from which they came. You are now the one and only guardian of said map, on a mission to uncover the identities of the super-powered villains, and return the map to the world. But sometimes this is easier said than done. Three years ago, Scott grew too big for his swamp. He'd always been a bit on the large side, but after millions of years in the swamp his size exploded. He needed a new home, but the developers of the Underdome were beyond help. So Scott set off into the unknown. He survived, of course, but it wasn't easy. There were dangers all around: the looming threat of viruses, the shapeshifting serpentine monsters known as the Sleet, and most dangerous of all, the carnivorous, nearly invisible forest creatures called "Ghosts." As the forest grew, Scott met new friends: alien-like creatures called "Tints," who came to help; a helpful army of "Guardians" (who, eventually, turned against him); an eccentric inventor named "Kat" (who loved Scott, but thought he could do better); and the villainous "Big Evils" (who became his best friend). As he made his way through the forest, Scott crossed paths with many of its creatures: Mannequins, Paper Dolls, Shape Shifters, and many more. The path before him was strewn with pitfalls. Danger was everywhere. But sometimes, danger can be an ally. After collecting the big three dimensional puzzle pieces from his mission in the Underdome, Scott set out to retrace his steps to the ancient dungeons, and save the world again. The big three dimensional puzzle pieces collected during the Underdome mission unlock the under-construction Nemesis Tower, a place where things get really interesting. The three different dungeons will each contain three different story lines, each with unique puzzles and obstacles. But with every new piece, there's always the danger that one piece will be missing. So beware: the villainous Big Evils are still out there! And there are no back-up plans. Escape

What's new in Farplane Relic:

"Ice Cream Surfer" is an episode of the British comedy television series The Goodies. This episode was the third programme in the seventh series. Written by the regular writer of the series, Tony Lee, the episode was made in black and white and first aired on 24 November 1980. Plot The three Goodies enter a big supermarket in search of Tea, trying not to get any food because they are on a diet. As a police car pulls into the car park they realise that they may have a tough time getting out. After deliberating with each other, the trio decide to continue with their plan to cheat on their diet, though they cannot decide between diet cola and diet orange juice. They enter a storeroom, and proceed to mash each of the cans of sugary drinks they hold, blending the drinks while mumbling "Jungle juice". On their way from the storeroom, they come across a boy entering through the store's main door dressed as a penguin - chocolate-dipped in plastic - and the trio decide to take advantage of the boy's outfit. After waiting for him to collect his change out of a machine, the trio guide the boy to the storeroom, where, they suggest, "free plastic items" are stored. They persuade the boy to carry them to the till, and press the button marked "EVERYTHING". As the boy begins removing plastic food from the till, the mechanism activates and gives enough power to fly the penguin-boy into the air. The Goodies are present at the till when the boy gets hit by lightning from the machine, altering his concept of reality, and he is whisked away. Micky and Graeme try to figure out how the boy got into the till in order to free the items stored inside it. While they are in their storeroom trying to figure it out, the boxes' operating systems overlap and, before their eyes, the shelf's system appears, loaded with packaged and canned foods. The boxes call the boy "neighbor", "brother", and "son". Under the boy's guidance, the boxes soon begin removing packaged foods from the shelves, until all that is in view of the Goodies and the storeroom is a huge quantity of food, including a shrink-wrapped block

Zenge is an interactive story, where the player is Eon - a journeyman who's stuck between the worlds and time. Through the game, you'll be presented with beautiful animations of the island floating in the vast ocean. Features: - Beautiful art with unobtrusive puzzles. - No highscore, no time limit, no inputs. - No encounters. Just you and what you see. - No words, just music. - Intuitive and intuitive logic. - No inputs. No endings. No attention grabbers. - No tutorial - this is a story. - Four beautiful and relaxing music tracks, for each chapter. - Three endings that coincide with Eon's progress. - Made by Michal "Hamster" Pawlowski and Konrad Januszewski (he drew it!).

A: Goblin's Guide to Vice City is a puzzle video game. The game is free, easy to understand, and has one ending. The game was developed by John Hattier, and is based on the popular Grand Theft Auto series. The objective of the game is to find 100 keys to unlock the vault, and thus find and acquire the 50,000 dollar reward. The game is split up into chapters, each chapter is separated by a collection of numbered doors. Each of the doors has a key slot, and no number of keys will open a particular door. The keys are scattered throughout the map and can be picked up by left-clicking on them. Having a key in hand is not essential, in fact it's usually not necessary to have the key in your possession, but if you do the puzzle will be easier. Once you've unlocked the first door, a cutscene will play and the doors to the next chapter will appear. Once you've opened all the doors in a given chapter, the final door will appear. At this point, the story will reach its conclusion and the game will automatically end. At the end of every chapter, a pair of eyeball icons will appear on the ground. These can be used to teleport to any door, thus allowing for the rapid completion of the puzzle. A: I think that Freecell (one of the earliest puzzle games around) is the kind of puzzle you're looking for. It looks really interesting. Each of the 16 cards shown here contains some number of one of the four top cards shown here. By aligning several
