Image caption US Secretary of State John Kerry is expected to land in Kiev later The US secretary of state has warned of increasing violence ahead of the November presidential election in Ukraine. John Kerry said such violence would increase the likelihood of an invasion of eastern Ukraine. Mr Kerry is in Kiev to meet Ukraine's new leader Petro Poroshenko. The Obama administration has announced plans to provide Kiev with lethal defensive weapons. But there has been widespread anger on the streets of Kiev and in western Ukraine over Mr Obama's decision, which has been strongly criticised by Russia. Mr Kerry was speaking in Kiev after meeting with Ukraine's new president, Petro Poroshenko, who spent much of his time in the past year campaigning in the east. 'Strong message' Mr Poroshenko has the thankless task of trying to bring about an end to more than three months of unrest in the east of the country. He is facing a tough challenge from billionaire opposition leader, Victor Yanukovich, who opposes closer ties with the European Union and who currently controls the former pro-Russia government. Mr Poroshenko was elected in May and after he announced he was ready to sign an association agreement with the EU, a deal which would have been more advantageous for Ukraine than a free trade agreement with Russia, the violence increased. The EU's foreign policy chief, Catherine Ashton, has said she expects to meet Mr Poroshenko next week in Brussels. Mr Kerry told reporters: "The more that we can do to help the Ukrainians deal with this issue the better, because it is not in anybody's interest to see Ukraine continue to deteriorate in the 21st century, and as I am leaving the country and walking down this street it is even more of a concern and I think an open act of war. "We are sending a strong message that we are there and we support
